Officers of both the war and navy departments were concerned today over the report from Vera Cruz that a small Mexican force was prepared to blow up railway bridges between Vera Cruz and Mexico City. Several Mexican guards could not be replaced and the railroad was threatened to be closed off from Mexico to the inaccessible. The plan of the navy and war departments for possible operations out of Vera Cruz hung on the possession of the railroad and it was feared they would be seriously hampered if the bridges were destroyed.

The naval authorities indicated that an expedition out of Vera Cruz along the railroad could insure the safety of the bridges, but it is pointed out that this would be an act of war. This probably would be the first move in case war actually is declared. Meanwhile the navy forces in Vera Cruz must consider their operations in their own and the immediate environment.
